THE WIND ON THE WINDOW

Written in Chinese by Dai Wei

Translated into English by Ouyang Yu

Such a strong wind blows from the opposite mountains but does not break

brighter than any autumn I can see the metal shining on its surface

The strong wind darkens meditation of the season hands of fruit scattering sugar on the night pouring lemon juice into sleep

Details dearly loved by time and memory the wind on the window does not change the breath of the mountains and the rivers what it changes is a window where there is the sunrise that I have touched
