LI PO (701-762)

A NIGHT WITH FRIENDS

That we may purge
the world's unending sadness
Let's linger here
and drink these wine-jars dry.

This night's sheer sheen
invites long conversation,
The moon's too bright
for sleep to ease one's eye
But, safely drunk,
let's bed on this bare mountain;
Our pillow, earth,
our coverlet, the sky.

(Translated from the Chinese by Graeme Wilson)

ROBERT HANDICOTT

AFTER RAIN, NELLY BAY

The hills are disrobing
for the sun; for the moment their heads are lost in their petticoats.